

Communication during technical interviews is typically the act of developing meaning among entities or groups through the use of mutually understood signs, symbols and conventions. It is largely concerned with the way one expresses themselves, whether they're able to get the other person to understand their opinion/idea or are able to convey one's thoughts with ease.

The art of communication is often misinterpreted as good spoken and verbal English skills but it essentially is an amalgamation of the way you express yourself and the medium in which you express yourself. The medium depends upon the situation you're in. So if we need to appear for an interview to get the role in the corporate industry, English is the go-to language.

Effective communication during technical interviews forms the basis of coordination among people working together and enables fluent working. In the modern world, the growth of telecommunication, information technology and the growing competition and complexity in production have increased the importance of communication in organisations large and small irrespective of their type and kind.

People with good communication skills are preferred during job interviews as it is greatly useful at the workplace in overcoming diversities, building trust and respect, and creating conditions for sharing creative ideas and solving problems. Good communication skills enable managers to receive and send negative or heavy messages without creating disruption of trust. It helps in improving problem-solving skills, empowers one to work productively, and makes quicker and stronger decisions.

Practice is the key here so put yourself out and overcome your nervousness. Overlook your vocab initially and keep speaking in English- talk to yourself and the people around you. Talk to your friends only in English and appear for as many mock interviews as possible. Prepare beforehand for HR questions like:

- Tell me about yourself
- What are your strengths?
- What are your weaknesses?
- Why would you like to work here?

Make a rough map of your answer so that you are able to express and speak confidently during interviews.
